Ronald Ventura has earned critical acclaim for his electrifying pre-recession auction bids, reconfirming his place as one of the most celebrated contemporary Filipino artists. Ventura creates sculptures, assemblages and paintings that examine fear, religious realization and the human mind and body in an industrial civilization and uses his creativity and imagination to express a rather explosive view of rising matters in Filipino pop culture. He depicts a struggle between the desire for commercial products and the constant state of dissatisfaction with materialism. Already collecting “superlative price pick-ups” in the auction world, he has been compared as the young “Dali.” Making waves in the art scene, Ventura will undoubtedly be under spotlight for years to come.
